BUSH, OBAMA MEET AT THE WHITE HOUSE TO DISCUSS COURSE OF THE NATION

Associated Press

WASHINGTON The Bushes welcomed the Obamas to the White House on Monday, offering a symbolic glimpse of what's in store for the country: a new first family along with a new administration.

President Bush and President-elect Obama met in the Oval Office, their first face-to-face session, to talk about the future of the country, while First Lady Laura Bush and Obama's wife, Michelle, held their own meeting in the White House residence.

The Obamas arrived at the South Portico 11 minutes early with Bush and the first lady waiting for them. Laura Bush and Michelle Obama enjoyed a warm greeting, while the president and his successor exchanged smiles and a handshake.

Taking a bit of prerogative, the president-elect put his left hand on Bush's back as the two couples entered the Diplomatic Reception Room.

The two leaders offered no public comments.

It was the president-elect's first visit to the White House since his dominant election victory, and his first visit ever to the Oval Office.

The scene was a sunny fall day with moderate temperatures and colorful, fading autumn leaves.

Laura Bush was to give Michelle Obama a tour of the first family's living quarters, including the bedrooms used by children of past presidents. White House press secretary Dana Perino said the two women were expected to talk about living in one of the world's most famous building, from family life to the help provided by executive staff.

Obama started his day in Chicago, dropping his two daughters, Malia, 10, and Sasha, 7, at school, each with a kiss, and then going to a gym for a workout.

President-elect Barack Obama arrives Monday at the White House for a visit with President Bush. ZBIGNIEW BZDAK/TRIBUNE

Josh Bolten, Bush's chief of staff, said Bush and Obama likely each had a list of issues to go down, likely including the financial crisis and the war in Iraq.

"I know the president will want to convey to President-elect Obama his sense of how to deal with some of the most important issues of the day," said Bolten, interviewed on C-SPAN by reporters from The Associated Press and The Washington Post. "But exactly how he does that, I don't know, and I don't think anybody will know."

Git-no?

President-elect Obama's advisers are quietly crafting a proposal to ship dozens, if not hundreds, of imprisoned terrorism suspects to the U.S. to face criminal trials, a plan that would make good on his promise to close the Guantanamo Bay prison but could require creation of a controversial new system of justice.

Under plans being put together in Obama's camp, some detainees would be released and many others would be prosecuted in U.S. criminal courts. A third group—the ones whose cases are most entangled in highly classified information—might have to go before a new court designed especially to handle sensitive national security cases, according to advisers and Democrats involved in the talks.

Advisers participating directly in the planning spoke on condition of anonymity because the plans aren't final. AP

Signed, sealed, delivered—for a price

Chicago Tribune

Just about anything with President-elect Obama's name on it is worth money these days, especially if he wrote it himself.

Following Obama's election last week as the first African-American president, entrepreneurs are offering all sorts of items bearing his autograph. Caution: Some of the books, balls and magazines for sale online will be the work of forgers.

And appraisers aren't experienced yet in separating out the real Obama from the fake, said Daniel Weinberg, who sells historical documents and signatures at the Abraham Lincoln Book Shop, 357 W. Chicago Ave.

Right now, an authentic Obama signature is probably worth $250 to $350, Weinberg says, though the price of some items now for sale or up for bid are as much as 10 times higher.

A few items reportedly autographed by Obama that were available on the Internet in recent days:

» A Mad Magazine featuring an Obama-like Alfred E. Neuman on the cover holding a banner saying, "Yes, We Can't," $3,500.

» A gray Chicago Cubs road jersey, $2,400. (What would Obama's fellow White Sox fans say?)

» Copies of his books, "Dreams From My Father" and "The Audacity of Hope," ranging from $399.99 to $2,475.

» An official major-league baseball, $300.

» A copy of the Wednesday Chicago Sun-Times, $440. A note attached to the offer on eBay said, "I was at the [Grant Park] rally [on Tuesday] and my aunt who work[s] for his campaign and was up close and got this newspaper sign[ed]."

Just remember the saying: Buyer beware.

What do you think of the CTA's latest "L" and bus experiments?

Share your comment on that or any other transit issue with goingpublic@tribune.com. Please include your full name, age and neighborhood, as we may include it in "Hey, CTA!"

» What's the big idea? Have you come up with a way to improve the CTA—whether it's music piped into trains or a lending library at "L" stations? Send your big ideas to goingpublic@tribune.com. Also, stop by her blog at redeyechicago.com/ctablog.

Let the CTA know if experiments work

It's time to share your West Side story.

On Thursday, the CTA is holding a public meeting to discuss a number of West Side service additions and changes instituted in 2006, including the experimental Pink Line and adjustments to bus routes including the No. 12-Roosevelt, No. 90-Harlem and No. 65-Grand.

The transit agency board is thinking about making these bus and "L" experiments permanent, so interested public transit parties better hustle on over to the meeting 6 p.m. at the 10th Police District office on 3315 W. Ogden Ave. and sound off.

This is your chance, so speak now, or hold your public transit peace.

If you can't show up in person and don't have access to CNN's Election-Night hologram technology, send your suggestions in writing to ctaboard@transitchicago.com until Nov. 18.

Riders owe it to themselves to speak up on the service additions and adjustments the CTA cooks up in its bus and "L" lab. Some in the recent past have been great while others have been, well, not so great.

Let's reminisce about prior examples of mass transit mad science and grade them with "go" (good), "standing, waiting for signals ahead" (neutral) and "stop" (bad).

Feel free to borrow these ratings if you meet up with or e-mail the CTA board about West Side service.

Seatless 'L' cars

In September, the CTA decided to toy with the concept of removing most of the seats from at least two "L" cars during rush hour, in an effort to increase capacity. The Brown Line became the guinea pig for a service adjustment that met with boos from some and accolades from others.

Rating: Standing, waiting for signals ahead.

Personally, because the odds of scoring a seat during Brown Line rush already are low, it's not appealing to me to have those hopes dashed even further. But I'm willing to have my mind changed by any commuters who are embracing this experiment.

Next-bus tracker

"Going Public" hearts this technology that allows riders with Internet-enabled devices to zero in on the location of buses along their routes at ctabustracker.com.

Live on 75 of 153 routes, next-bus tracker started out as a pilot program on the No. 20-Madison route back in August of 2006.

The system hasn't solved bus bunching, at least according to riders who e-mail and call "Going Public" about the approaching convoys they can clearly see on their tracker screens. But the GPS-enabled wizardry give riders a heads up as to how quickly they need to get to their stops, a huge boon come the colder weather ahead.

Rating: Go. Can't wait to see this spread to the remaining bus routes by the end of next year.

Brokers making hundreds off 'ticket to nothing'

Chicago Tribune

The hottest ticket of 2009 can't be reserved yet, hasn't been distributed and is supposed to be free.

But on Monday, tickets for President-elect Obama's inaugural events were selling for up to $10,858 apiece.

Ticket brokers wouldn't say where the tickets were coming from, and the committee in charge of the main event emphasized that none have been sent out yet. All 240,000 tickets to the swearing-in are sitting in a locked room, and won't be released for months.

In effect, the brokers are selling a promise of a ticket, banking on the ability to get a ticket at a lower price than they charge for it.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), chairwoman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies, said she is drafting a bill to ban sales of inauguration tickets, while her committee is sending a stern letter to Capitol employees outlining ethics rules about making money from access to power, and inaugural tickets.

"Any member of Congress is prohibited from profiting by their position," said Carole Florman, inaugural committee spokeswoman. "A letter is going out to them reminding them of that. Soon."

The individual committees organizing events like parades and inaugural galas haven't even formed yet, Florman said.

Indeed, with so much up in the air about the Jan. 20 festivities, there seemed to be only two certainties Monday:

Inaugurating the first African-American

U.S. president would be historic.

And second, everyone wanted a ticket.

Greatseats.com offered spots at the yet-to-be-planned inaugural parade for between $495 and $1,815, with caveats that none are available now. StubHub offered parade tickets for $681 to $1,025, with a money-back guarantee.

They've already sold "several," said StubHub spokeswoman Vanessa Daniele, plus a pair of tickets for the swearing-in ceremony that together cost $21,716.

"I think it's shocking," said Florman, who said the brokers were selling "a ticket to nothing" because they didn't have any tickets yet.

Only members of Congress can really dole them out, she said. They get them Jan. 19, a day before the event.

Who needs a ticket?

Chicagoans among 1.5 million scrambling to get to D.C. for front-row view of history

Chicago Tribune

Airlines are jacking up fares, some hotels are turning people away, and congressional offices say it will be impossible to satisfy the unprecedented demand for tickets to President-elect Obama's inauguration.

Yet people will not be deterred. Tickets or no tickets, they're going.

More than 1.5 million are expected to pour into Washington for Obama's swearing-in—nearly three times the number who attended the 2005 inauguration events, said William Hanbury, president of Destination D.C., the city's tourism department.

In the Chicago area, residents are scrambling to make their Jan. 20 arrangements.

Keith Chambers and his wife already have reserved six hotel rooms in the nation's capital and they've bought their plane tickets.

Chambers, a trustee for the village of South Holland, booked rooms right after the Democratic National Convention.

"I knew Obama was on a destined chart," he said. "There was nothing to prevent this from happening. My wife and I were confident in our faith and confident in how the campaign was run. There was never any doubt in our minds."

Right after the election, he began lobbying for tickets to the inaugural events. So far, four of the six hotel rooms he secured have been claimed by his friends and family. He's holding on to the other two for people who might make up their minds later.

"I don't care if I'm a block away or 10 miles away," Chambers said. "I need to be in the presence of this moment."

Dunbar High School principal Barbara Hill has been making phone calls and sending e-mails to raise money to send a group of students to witness the swearing-in.

"It's a time in history that we'll never be able to get back," said Hill, who hopes Dunbar's marching band will get to participate in the parade. "We have a sense of pride about Obama. He's from Chicago and the South Side. We want to be a part of this great event."

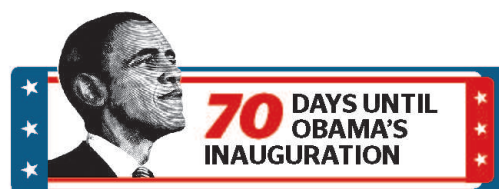

Chicagoans aren't the only ones clamoring to get to Washington. At Brock Tours and Travel, in Decatur, Ga., they sold out of a $1,300 travel package days after Obama's win.

That package doesn't include tickets to inaugural events, but people jumped at the deal anyway, said Sandy Duncan, an agent with the company.

The explosion of interest has sent fares soaring on flights to the nation's capital. Ticket prices for economy seats from Chicago to Washington-area airports on the dates surrounding the inauguration range from a low of $436 round-trip on discount Southwest Airlines to $1,222 on US Airways, according to orbitz.com. That's a hefty premium. A week earlier, seats on the same flights were selling for about $200 round-trip.

A sign outside the U.S. Capitol at dawn notes that the area is closed for construction of the 2009 presidential inauguration site in Washington D.C. GETTY IMAGES

Those who can afford to fly there may have trouble finding a place to stay. The Washington metro area's 95,000 hotel rooms are filling up fast, and some hotels are already sold out. Would-be visitors are calling hotels as far away as Wilmington, Del.

On Monday night, there were plenty of condos on Craigslist available for rent—for $10,000 for inauguration week.

And then there's the problem of tickets.

The office of Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr. (D-Ill.) created a Web site to handle requests, but it was jammed Monday, Jackson's spokesman Rick Bryant said. Among those on the list asking for tickets were aldermen, current and retired south suburban mayors and government leaders.

Rep. Bobby Rush (D-Ill.) said his office had been overwhelmed with more than 2,000 calls, and he put out an exasperated statement.

"Because my staff continues to be inundated with an unprecedented level of requests for this event, I want my constituents to know that our office does not have any tickets to distribute," he said. "In fact, we only expect to receive a small number of tickets the week before the event. I urge my constituents to keep this in mind as they make their travel plans."

Dr. Renee Matthews, a physician from Bronzeville, doesn't yet have a ticket, of course, and she hasn't yet booked transportation, but she's put her relatives in the Washington area on notice: Expect a few house guests in January.

Matthews' parents are planning to drive to the capital from their home in Farmington Hills, Mich. Her sister and two closest girlfriends will take the train down from New Jersey and New York.

"I will not miss it," Matthews said. "The first time ... an African-American president ... oh, no, I won't miss it."

She expects it to be reminiscent of other great public gatherings she's heard stories about, like the 1963 March on Washington. For so many, it also will be like a family reunion.

"I've only spoken to one person who said they weren't sure they are going. Everyone I know will be there," she said.

Old man and the Shedd

'Granddad' celebrates 75th year at aquarium

Chicago Tribune

"Granddad" the Australian lungfish is so old ...
How old is he?

He's so old that he's being honored as a pivotal part of Chicago history.

Since 1933, when "Granddad" took up residence at the aquarium, he has lured crowds of World's Fair visitors, helped establish a mentoring program and was pivotal in opening up a relationship with Australia.

"He's the one that started it all," said Debra Fassnacht, executive vice president of the Shedd. "He's the reason why Shedd has hosted Australian soccer teams."

Granddad celebrated his 75th anniversary at the Shedd on Monday, and aquarium officials say the 4-foot, 25-pound scaly creature is the oldest fish in any public aquarium in the world—but officials still don't know his real age.

The Shedd's former director, Walter Chute, wanting to attract visitors to the 1933 World's Fair, arranged for Granddad's relocation from the Taronga Zoo in Sydney. More than 4.5 million people visited during the fair's two year run, Fassnacht said.

Granddad also is partly responsible for establishing the Steve Irwin Fellowship, a teen mentorship program that sends a high school student interested in science to Sydney to work at the Taronga Zoo.

Although Monday's event was a celebration, Granddad had all the exuberance of, well, a really old fish.

"Normally they're just really a nice slow fish," said Bill Gwozdz, a senior aquarist. "Unfortunately it makes for an unexciting feeding."

Granddad was content at the bottom of the tank as younger lungfish and even a turtle, swam toward the top for their meal of shrimp and chopped clams.

In honor of Granddad, seniors can visit the Shedd free Thursday through Sunday.

Board decides suspect in Hudson murders must remain in prison

Chicago Tribune

The man police have called a suspect in the murder of three members of actress Jennifer Hudson's family will remain in prison while investigators continue to investigate the triple slaying.

The Illinois Prisoner Review Board ruled Monday that there was reason to believe William Balfour, 27, had violated his parole and should be kept in custody pending a full hearing.

The major reason for that was his girlfriend, identified as Shonta Cathey, had said that she had seen him with a gun that matched the murder weapon, according to Jorge Montes, chairman of the review board.

"It's a very serious allegation ...," Montes said.

In addition, the board said he had violated parole by being in places where drugs were sold. That stems from a June 19 drug arrest, but Balfour's parole was not revoked at that time.

During the hearing, Balfour protested the use of the evidence that authorities presented to hold him, Montes said. Balfour was not represented by a lawyer.

Balfour

Another full hearing to decide whether to revoke Balfour's parole was set for Dec. 3.

Balfour, who is married to the Oscar-winning actress' sister, Julia Hudson, has been on parole for a 1999 attempted murder conviction.

After he was questioned by Chicago detectives for 48 hours, his parole was revoked following the Oct. 24 murders of his estranged wife's brother, mother and 7-year-old son. He has not been charged in the case. He has been held at Stateville Correctional Center outside Joliet since Oct. 26.

Balfour acknowledged being at the Hudson's Englewood home on the morning that the actress' mother, Darnell Donerson, and her brother, Jason Hudson, were gunned down inside the house, law enforcement sources said.

Julia Hudson's son, Julian, was abducted from the home and his body discovered three days later, shot twice in the head and slumped in the back of Jason Hudson's Chevy Suburban on a West Side street.

Balfour's current girlfriend also told police that he told her he had been involved in the killings of Donerson and Hudson, sources said.

After he was questioned by Chicago detectives for 48 hours, William Balfour's parole was revoked following the Oct. 24 murders of his estranged wife's brother, mother and 7-year-old son. He has not been charged in the case.

@tribune.com

Dan Fickel, profiled in a 2007 RedEye story, began law school at the University of Chicago in 2002. Fickel first went to Iraq in 2004, and currently is stationed in Samarra with an economic development team. He plans to graduate from the Law School in 2009.

Today is one of two days a year we honor our nation's veterans. These last few years have seen your generation engaged in another controversial war far from home, another difficult war with inauspicious beginnings and an uncertain end.

When you look out on today's parades and memorials, you'll see some young faces out there—your generation carrying your flag to new parts that have never known freedom or equality. There are many at home who say our task is impossible, and there are many more abroad who oppose us with a full campaign of violence and evil. It is those young faces you see on the news, men and women of your generation, who are working to prove those naysayers wrong, to defeat the Taliban, Al Qaeda in Iraq, and Muqtada's Militia.

Make no mistake: The world would be a better place without war, without policy errors, without new veterans. But as long as there are those bent on using terrorism to deny freedom of religion, freedom of speech and freedom from want and fear, you will need those soldiers, those new ranks of veterans, young men and women from your generation out on the frontier of freedom. Today you honor them.

I have known and served with those men and women. I have watched them fall. I have cried by myself at night at the loss of friends I will never forget. But I have never seen anything as beautiful as your free American soldier, upright and strong, believing in your country and your principles, and going forward into the darkness to meet your enemies.

Is it worth it? That's an impossible question. Try asking the terrorists who are losing. DAN FICKEL IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

City plans to cut 29 jobs at Chicago airports

Mayor Daley's administration plans to eliminate the jobs of more than two dozen people who translate and answer questions for international visitors to the city's airports.

While cutting as many as 29 "airport customer services representatives," Daley's proposed 2009 budget calls for keeping—and giving raises to—several managers who are above the greeters in the Aviation Department hierarchy.

City budget records show that the administration plans to cut the Aviation Department's "external communications" staff from 41 employees to 10. But the section would still retain a deputy commissioner and a marketing director, each of whom would make more than $114,000 a year, as well as a $94,848-a-year customer services manager.

"That seems like misplaced priorities," Ald. Brendan Reilly (42nd) said Monday. "Reductions at management level should follow reductions of front-line staff."

The 29 greeters, who are paid annual salaries between $38,000 and $58,000, say their departures would leave the airport staff without valuable multilingual talent that is necessary to properly welcome foreign visitors to Chicago.

Under brilliant blue skies, hundreds of people, many of them Chicago Police officers in uniform, gathered at Rockefeller Chapel on the University of Chicago campus Monday for the funeral of Joseph Airhart Jr., a police detective who died seven years after he was shot in the head while trying to arrest a robbery suspect.

Ex-deputy charged in fatal crash

A former Cook County sheriff's deputy charged with drunken driving was being held in lieu of $50,000 bail Monday in connection with the weekend death of his 8-year-old grandnephew. Richard Gorney, 71, of the 5600 block of North Kenneth Avenue, was charged, police said. Troy Evers, 8, of Roselle was ejected when the car Gorney was driving slammed into a house, officials said.

Missing girl found

A 3½-year-old girl who was the subject of an intensive search after she left a CVS pharmacy on the Northwest Side on Monday with a woman she encountered on the sidewalk was found later in the evening and taken to a hospital, authorities said. The girl was found about eight blocks away at Kostner and Wellington Avenues, outside in near-freezing temperatures, said police spokesman John Mirabelli.

Shooting suspect dies after arrest

A suspect arrested shortly after a man was shot to death on the West Side on Sunday afternoon died after he began having difficulty breathing and police officers took him to a hospital, authorities said Monday. The final ruling on the death of Jermaine Johnson, 34, was inconclusive and was pending toxicology results, officials said. The incident unfolded Sunday when Anthony White, 43, was shot in the 100 block of South Mayfield Avenue in Austin, police said.

$800 million

A staggering economy is eating away at state budget revenue, creating what could be a budget hole of $800 million or more, the Blagojevich administration warned Monday.

BLOOMBERG

1 AIG bailout balloons

In a record bailout of a private company, the government on Monday provided a new $150 billion financial-rescue package to insurance giant American International Group, including $40 billion for partial ownership. U.S. Treasury Interim Assistant Secretary Neel Kashkari (above) said the bailout was needed to preserve the stability of the financial markets. The action was taken as it became clear that an original lifeline thrown to AIG in September would be insufficient. The $40 billion infusion comes from the $700 billion bailout package. As part of the new arrangement, the Federal Reserve is reducing a $85 billion loan it had made available to AIG to $60 billion.

2 Circuit breaker?

Circuit City Stores filed for bankruptcy protection on Monday as analysts question whether the nation's second-biggest electronics retailer will be able to survive. The company also said it cut 700 more jobs at its Richmond, Va., headquarters.

3 Bush meets troops

President Bush on Monday visited wounded U.S. troops and said their treatment and progress was inspiring. He met with 18 patients and presented six Purple Hearts during his stop at the National Naval Medical Center.

4 Nuke fears in Syria

Diplomats say uranium has been found in environmental samples from a Syrian site bombed by Israel on suspicion it was a covert nuclear reactor. The diplomats say the discovery merits further investigation.

5 Palin's closet check

Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin spent part of the weekend going through her clothing to determine what belongs to the Republican Party after it spent $150,000-plus on a wardrobe for the VP nominee, Palin's dad said.

6 Nuns kidnapped

Gunmen firing automatic weapons dragged two Italian Roman Catholic nuns from their home in rural Kenya on Monday and drove them into lawless Somalia in a rare cross-border kidnapping, officials said. The nuns, 60 and 67, were working on health programs.

Deadliest blasts in months

7 BAGHDAD A suicide bomber struck Monday in a crowd that had gathered where an explosion moments earlier damaged a bus full of schoolgirls, with both blasts killing at least 31 people and wounding 71 others, officials said.

Also Monday, a female suicide bomber believed to be in her teens attacked a security checkpoint in downtown Baqouba, 35 miles northeast of Baghdad, killing five people including a local leader of Sunni group opposed to Al Qaeda, police said. Fifteen other people were wounded in that explosion.

The twin Baghdad blasts—the deadliest in the city in months—occurred moments apart during the morning rush hour in the mostly Shiite Kasrah section of the Azamiyah district in the northern part of the Iraqi capital.

Police said the first explosion damaged a minibus carrying young girls to school. The second happened when a suicide bomber detonated an explosive belt in the middle of a crowd that had gathered around the vehicle.

MESSAGE?

An Interior Ministry official speculated that extremists may have sought to “send a message” to President-elect Obama about “the real situation in Iraq,” pressure the government not to sign a new security agreement with the U.S. or embarrass the ruling parties ahead of regional elections in January. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was offering speculation.

iPhone is No. 1

Apple's iPhone 3G became the top-selling mobile handset for U.S. adults in the third quarter, ending the Motorola Razr's long reign and signaling a shift in consumer tastes toward more feature-laden phones, according to new data from market research firm NPD Group. Motorola's Razr V3 had sat at the top of NPD's ranking for the last 12 quarters, NPD Group said Monday.

'Hawks soar again

“Everyone talked about it [the negative], the games on television—or lack thereof—and not about the team's performance.”

W. ROCKWELL “ROCKY” WIRTZ
new Blackhawks chairman

Hockey is a hot ticket in town again after years of mediocrity

Associated Press

Only two years ago, there were good seats available for pretty much every Blackhawks game. Lots and lots of them. Heck, in some spots, you could practically have your own section.

Nowadays, the Blackhawks are such a hot ticket even seats way up high in the United Center are filled.

“It's great to see this many people here,” Brian Jack said, walking with his 8-year-old son, Kevin, through the crowded concourse before last Monday's win over the Colorado Avalanche. “It's nice to see energy in the building. There's electricity in the air.”

A year after the season-ticket base dwindled to 3,400, it's now a franchise-record 14,000. A regular-season record 22,690 attended the Oct. 25 game against the Red Wings. Merchandise sales are up a whopping 60 percent from last year.

The Blackhawks are winning on the ice, too, off to their best start since 2001-02. They are on a four-game winning streak and have won six of their last eight. They are stocked with young talent, including Patrick Kane, the No. 1 pick in the 2007 draft and rookie of the year last season, and Jonathan Toews.

“You used to hear, ‘No one cares about the Hawks.’ We do, and more people are now,” longtime fan Eli Babich said. “It's slowly becoming a hockey town like it was in the '70s, '80s, even the early '90s.”

An Original Six franchise, the Blackhawks have a long and proud history in Chicago. Some of the sport's greatest names played here—Bobby Hull, Stan Mikita, Tony Esposito, Chris Chelios—and the team has won three Stanley Cups.

But after losing the 1992 Stanley Cup Finals to Pittsburgh, the franchise began a slow, painful decline.

The team missed the playoffs in 1998 for the first time in 29 years. They have been back only one time since.

In 2004, ESPN called the Blackhawks the worst franchise in professional sports.

“The last few years have been downright painful,” said Phil Gonzalez, a season-ticket holder for the last decade.

Fans directed their anger at longtime owner William Wirtz, derisively nicknaming him “Dollar Bill” for his refusal to televise most home games and his penny-pinching approach to contracts. They showed their disapproval the only way they knew how: by staying home.

It got so bad the minor-league Wolves actually outdrew the Blackhawks for a Sunday afternoon game in 2004.

When Wirtz died in September 2007, his son, Rocky, replaced him as chairman.

“I was a little skeptical,” Gonzalez admitted, “thinking, ‘like father, like son.’”

But W. Rockwell “Rocky” Wirtz's Blackhawks are nothing like his father's.

Less than a month after taking over, Rocky Wirtz put several home games on TV. All home games will be televised this season.

“If nothing else, we had to just eliminate the negative,” Wirtz said. “Everyone talked about it, the games on television—or lack thereof—and not about the team's performance.”

Wirtz then lured Cubs president John McDonough to do the same job with the Blackhawks.

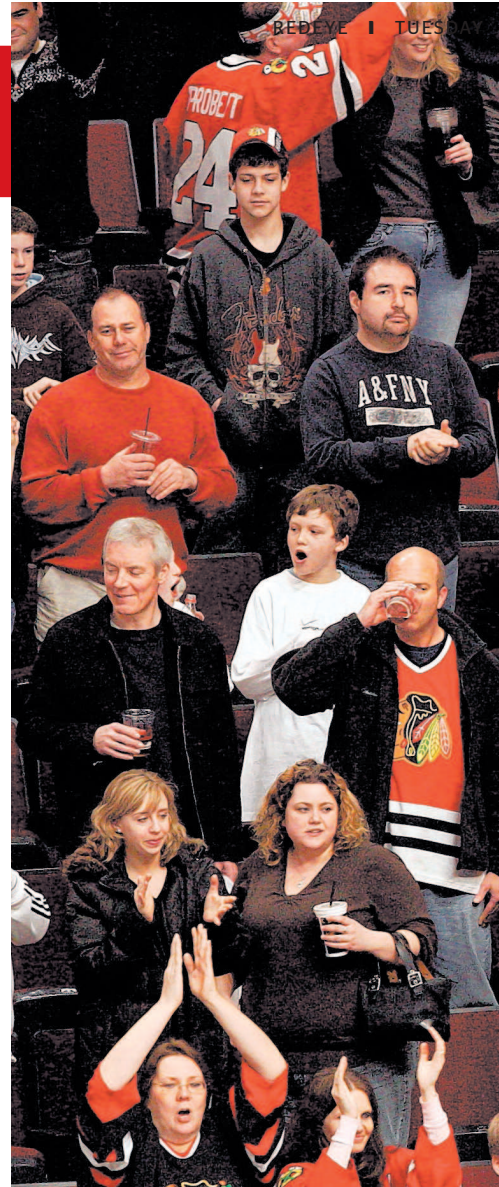

He rehired beloved broadcaster Pat Foley. The Blackhawks signed agreements with Comcast SportsNet and WGN, and partnered with the Cubs and White Sox to broaden the team's exposure.

More than anything, Wirtz and McDonough infused the Blackhawks organization with a positive, forward-thinking attitude. Mediocrity—or worse—would no longer be tolerated.

When attendance began climbing last season, McDonough made it clear crowds of 10,000 or 12,000 were nothing special.

“I saw 10,000 empty seats,” he said.

Wirtz and McDonough are encouraged by the type of fans the Blackhawks are drawing now. Parents with kids, like Jack and his son. The all-important twentysomething demographic too.

Fans, having felt unappreciated for so long, have wholeheartedly embraced the “new” Blackhawks.

General Manager Dale Tallon has built a strong, young core. Kane and Toews, the third overall pick in the 2006 draft, are the NHL's best young scoring tandem.

Kane led all rookies with 72 points last year; Toews tied for third with 54. Brian Campbell, the top free agent defenseman available, signed an eight-year deal over the summer, and the team's leading scorer is veteran Patrick Sharp.

The Blackhawks missed the playoffs by three points last season. When the team started slow this year, coach Denis Savard was fired and replaced by Joel Quenneville.

Wirtz and McDonough make it clear this is just the beginning of the Blackhawks' transformation. They want the playoffs to become a regular part of the schedule, and they want to win the Stanley Cup.

In that respect, Wirtz is exactly like his father.

“The common denominator,” he said “is to win.”

A Lovie-hate relationship

Lovie Smith's name is just like a fat guy named "Slim" or a short person called "Stretch." It's an oxymoron because I absolutely cannot stand Lovie Smith and his method of "coaching."

Rex Grossman's mediocre quarterback play aside, it's Lovie's poor defensive game plan that cost the Bears Sunday's game vs. the Titans.

Let's look at this realistically: Our backup quarterback went 20-37 with two TDs and 1 pick. What more do you ask of a BACKUP?

Smith on the other hand insists on running his "Cover Nothing" defense. Doesn't he realize that his defense is SOOO yesterday? Everybody in the league has adjusted to it, so isn't it time for him to make an adjustment himself? But he won't because he's a bad coach.

His game plan went a long way in losing a Super Bowl for the Chicago Bears. He failed to adjust, like always, and then what happened? Peyton Manning had a field day against us. His act has grown very, very old.

So when (cross my fingers) Jerry Angelo gets his good-for-nothing butt thrown out of Chicago, hopefully he doesn't forget to bring his precious Lovie and Lovie's crappy "Cover Nothing" defense with him.

Organ music is back too

Chicago Tribune

The Barton pipe organ that pumped up Blackhawks fans for decades at the old Chicago Stadium is long gone. But the fans' fondness for organ music lives on.

"Chicago is an organ town," said Peter Hassen, senior director of marketing and advertising for the Hawks.

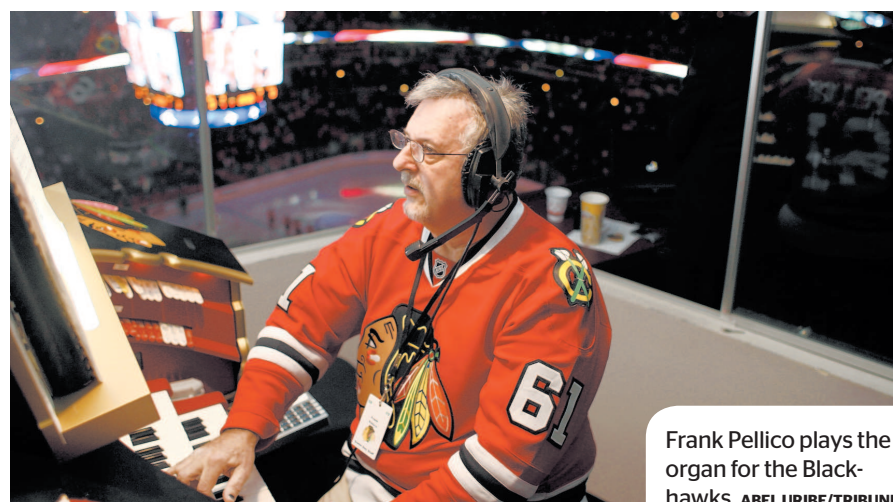

Even so, the team decided to tinker with Frank Pellico and his magic fingers a while back.

"It wasn't phased out," Hassen said. "We were kind of catering to a younger crowd, and we were looking at different things. You go through an evolution in game presentation, try different things. We didn't ever take it away. Just cut back on what Frank was doing during the games."

But the fans, the Hawks found out, really, really like their organ music, now provided by a $150,000 Allen instrument.

"The experiment was short-lived, and we learned something," Hassen said.

Even with all the other musical entertainment at United Center, the Hawks made room for the organ. And fans are happy.

Frank Pellico plays the organ for the Blackhawks. ABEL URIBE/TRIBUNE

"I think last year it was more of a topic of conversation," said Tony Demakis, a graphic designer from Crystal Lake and a season ticket-holder. "I haven't heard much this year."

"Last year I know there were more people upset about not hearing the organ. It seems like this year there are more things to be concerned with. Like they're actually winning, and people are more excited about the team [rather] than worrying about the organ."

Top cup

A week ago, we asked RedEye readers to elect a new Five on Five character. After counts and recounts (Whizkers threatened legal action), the winner is ... Stanley's Cup.

TOPIC	JIMMY GREENFIELD jgreenfield@tribune.com	TRACY SWARTZ tswartz@tribune.com	RAHULA STROHL rstrohl@tribune.com	LEO EBERSOLE lebersole@tribune.com	STANLEY'S CUP redeyesports@tribune.com
1 When do we know it's time to get excited about the Blackhawks?	Keep a close eye on my nipples.	When they hand out dollar bills to remind fans things could be Wirtz.	I could say something mean about hockey, but I'm actually excited. What a freakin' homer.	When. The. Playoffs. Start.	If you aren't excited already, you need a drink. A strong one.
2 Give Blackhawks leading scorers Patrick Sharp and Patrick Kane a nickname.	St. Patricks' Daze.	Patrick Swayze. Scoring big, right? They're just using you.	Paddy O'Scoresabunchofgoals.	"Kane and Able." Or "P. Sharp and Big Daddy Kane."	Cup Holders. Let's hope, at least.
3 What would you do for a ticket to the Winter Classic at Wrigley Field?	I'd run from the United Center to Wrigley Field naked. Seriously.	Nothing. I'll care about hockey when hell freezes over. Oh, wait.	Dye my hair black.	Line up a buyer for it and turn a profit. Sorry: As Andre 3000 said, I'm just being honest.	I'd allow those vendors to fill me with—ugh—a lite beer.
4 What's life gonna be like for the Bulls without Kirk Hinrich?	The exact same as life with Kirk Hinrich.	A lot of choking since no one can do Hinrich's maneuvers.	Like life with him, but with fewer pull-up jumpers on fast breaks.	They're going to miss his toughness—and ability to look like a forgotten Jonas brother.	Fewer wins, which means fewer celebratory drinks after the game.
5 The Atlanta Hawks are undefeated. How did this happen?	The Tampa Bay Rays went to the World Series. Shift happens.	The team used to be in St. Louis. That makes them No. 1 with a bullet.	Maybe the Stanford snob who left them for Greece was holding them back.	I'll take Dominique Wilkins and "time machine" for $400, Alex.	Must be all those years practicing in the college ranks.

HOMETOWN HITS

Sunday will mark the first time since Dec. 8, 1991, the Bears have played the Packers without Brett Favre at quarterback.

» Lance Briggs continued his Pro Bowl season with a solid game, including a devastating hit on fullback Ahmard Hall that Hall didn't remember after it knocked him out of the game in the third quarter. "I don't even know what happened," Hall told the Tennessean.

The Sox announced the start of a construction project at U.S. Cellular Field designed to improve access to fans entering at Gate 5. The project, started by the Illinois Sports Facilities Authority, will include the installation of escalators with a weather-protected enclosure. The project will cost about $15 million as part of the ISFA's capital repair responsibilities for U.S. Cellular Field.

Thursday's Dallas game, which was originally scheduled for 8:30 p.m., will start at 7:30 p.m. instead and be televised on Comcast SportsNet.

Fire midfielder Diego Gutierrez, who is retiring after this season, missed Thursday's playoff game against New England because he was recovering from the flu. "It's always in the back of your mind that you won't end your career in shorts," Gutierrez said. "But I had faith in the guys that they would go out and do the job."

Blues to pay fans' mortgages

Nice catch

Cubs' Soto named NL Rookie of the Year

Cubs catcher Geovany Soto ran away with the NL Rookie of the Year award Monday.

Soto, the steady catcher who helped the Cubs win the NL Central title, got 31 of 32 first-place votes from the Baseball Writers' Association of America. The other went to Cincinnati's Joey Votto.

Soto hit .285 with 23 homers, 35 doubles and 86 RBIs. He became the first catcher to win Rookie of the Year in either league since Mike Piazza of the L.A. Dodgers in 1993.

The 25-year-old Soto had a disappointing October after his team compiled the best regular-season record in the NL. He went 2-for-11 (.182) without an RBI as the Cubs were swept in the first round by the Dodgers. In July, Soto became the first National League catcher to start an All-Star game.

The NL Cy Young Award will be announced Tuesday.

Evan Longoria won the AL rookie award. White Sox second baseman Alexei Ramirez was the runner-up after receiving 18 second-place votes.

CUBS HITS

Tribune Co. has asked bidders for the Chicago Cubs to submit new offers before Nov. 27, Thanksgiving Day, according to two people involved in the negotiations. The bids have to include details on how the prospective buyers will finance the purchase of the team. Chicago-based Tribune, which owns the Chicago Tribune, RedEye and other media properties, also is looking to sell Wrigley Field and a 25 percent stake in Comcast SportsNet, a regional sports network. Before the financial crisis gripped Wall Street, the package was once valued at more than $1 billion.

The Blackhawks are making some noise. They are 7-3-3 and have a core of young players who know how to play. They are pulling out wins and seem to be learning from their mistakes.

Kind of like the Bulls from a couple of seasons ago. Remember how that turned out?

I think these Blackhawks are for real though. And their games are finally being televised. Here now, my TV picks.

Taylor made

Swift's writing continues to improve on new CD

Taylor Swift
"Fearless"

When an unknown teenage artist and an upstart label both come from nowhere to sell well over 3 million albums, the question is: What do you do next? With Taylor Swift's sophomore album "Fearless," the answer is: You get even better.

There's still the teen angst of love wanted and love rejected from her self-titled debut, which produced such hits as "Tim McGraw," "Teardrops on My Guitar" and "Our Song," but the 18-year-old Swift isn't in high school anymore and there's more thoughtful maturity in her writing. And some anger.

For the latter, there's the Joe Jonas break-up song "Forever & Always," cut for the album at the last minute.

Swift wrote seven of the 13 tracks on the album and co-wrote the rest. Along with "Forever & Always," some are quite personal. On "Fifteen"—a song with musical overtones reminiscent of Janis Ian's "At Seventeen"—she writes of her best high school friend, "Abigail gave everything she had to a boy who changed his mind and we both cried." The album is rich in vocal variety and tempos. The accompaniment ranges from acoustic with a quiet B-3 in the background on "Hey Stephen" to full strings on "Breathe" (not the Faith Hill version) or the powerful album closer "Change."

But the glory of this CD is Swift's writing and how it complements her unique style of singing. TOM GARDNER, AP

Seal
"Soul"

There's no doubt his music has always had soul, but now Seal properly covers the genre with his new album. The 12-track collection covers some of the genre's greatest songs. But Seal doesn't just go through the motions; instead he captures the emotion of the era. His silky smooth voice cuts through the very best that the Philadelphia, Memphis and Detroit sounds have to offer. Seal opens with a cover of Sam Cooke's "A Change Is Gonna Come," the song borne of civil rights era struggles. The recent election of Barack Obama to the U.S. presidency makes the song seem even more poignant. JOHN CARUCCI, AP

the auto-tune ringleader

T-Pain is leading the way when it comes to self-tuning his voice

The Washington Post

T-Pain is tired of hearing the sound of his own, heavily processed voice.

Actually, the Tallahassee, Fla., hip-hop star is tired of hearing everybody else simulating the sound of his synthesized voice—the one that's run through a software program called Auto-Tune for a giddy effect that makes him (and them) sound like a singing cyborg or a warbling chipmunk, or maybe a much funkier Peter Frampton.

Superstar singers and rappers from Kanye West and Lil Wayne to Chris Brown and Ciara have been borrowing T-Pain's trademark, so incensing him that he's using his natural voice to talk about it on his album "Thr33 Ringz," which drops Tuesday.

The Auto-Tune King, unplugged? It's the equivalent of Jack Nicholson removing his shades to stare you down, or your mother calling you by your full name to emphasize just how much trouble you're in.

"Listen to the radio, it's obvious I still kill," T-Pain raps au naturel in a song called "Karaoke." The 23-year-old hitmaker proceeds to kill the copycats with a profanity-laced rant in which he seethes: "Y'all [bleeeceep] can die slowly / Cause to me it sound like a buncha karaoke."

Oh, snap!

Or, as it might sound via Auto-Tune: Snaaa-aaauh-auhhuurrr-urhhhh-AAAAP!

"Every time I hear somebody singing one of their songs, it sounds like them singing karaoke of one of my songs," T-Pain said. "Don't think I'm not going to hear it when you take that whole style from me. It's pretty much everybody; they're taking the sound I came out with, which was real different, very distinctive."

Until recently, the so-called "T-Pain effect" was actually known as "the Cher effect," after producers of Cher's 1998 dance-pop hit "Believe"

WHO USES AUTO-TUNE?

Following T-Pain's breakthrough using—or misusing—Auto-Tune, many artists have adopted it.

- » Lil Wayne's "Lollipop"
- » Kanye West's "Love Lockdown"
- » Chris Brown's "Forever"
- » Janet Jackson's "Feedback"
- » G-Unit's 50 Cent showcase, "Rider Pt. 2"
- » Songs that feature T-Pain himself, such as Ciara's new single, "Go Girl" pioneered the use of Auto-Tune to create rapturously robotic vocal flourishes that suggested a vocoder on steroids.

In fact, there's a long history of manipulated, metallic-sounding vocals (and sorta-vocals) in pop music, with artists from Kraftwerk, ELO and Bon Jovi to Madonna, Midnight Star and Daft Punk using everything from talk boxes to vocoders to spike their recordings with exotic, robotic voices.

» A talk box is a tubular device that allows a musician to change the content of an instrumental sound—via a plastic tube placed in the mouth—so the instrument appears to be "talking."

» A vocoder alters the sound and shape of the vocal signal by sending it through a keyboard synthesizer.

Operationally, Auto-Tune has more in common with a vocoder than a talk box.

T-Pain, whose given name is Faheem Najm, is careful to note the vocoder-and-talk-box-laced legacies of Roger Troutman (of Zapp) and Teddy Riley (Guy, Blackstreet) in "Karaoke." But there's no question that he's become synonymous with the suddenly ubiquitous Auto-Tune effect, which adds a distinct, delirious and decidedly sticky sound to his songs, many of them enormously successful.

Last year, two of T-Pain's singles and five others on which he was a featured vocalist landed in the Top 10 of Billboard's Hot 100, which some purists saw as yet another sign of the digital-music apocalypse. The alternate view: Making your singing voice sound like a Speak & Spell that's been submerged in a bathtub is no different from a guitarist using a wah-wah pedal to tweak the timbre of an instrumental line or a whammy bar to bend the pitch of a note.

"I've heard [the criticism] since I came out," said T-Pain, who just three years ago was a relatively unknown rapper who sometimes sang the hooks for his group, the Nappy Headz. "People were really hating on it. But I'm being accepted for doing it now. I'm actually being congratulated."

And copied.

"You're talking about bona fide hits by A-list artists, the biggest names in hip-hop," says Dion Summers, a senior programming director for Sirius XM's hip-hop and R&B channels. "The T-Pain technique definitely makes a song stand out. It sounds so cool, and it gives more rise to the record and makes it seem lighter. He really hit on a winning formula. It works; that's why these other artists are doing it."

In T-Pain's hands, Auto-Tune is used as a tool, not a crutch—a sort of flavor enhancer that falls somewhere between sweet cream butter and MSG. To achieve the effect, the Auto-Tune's "retune speed" setting is adjusted to zero; rather than moving a vocal toward the nearest correct note gradually, it's processed almost instantly, resulting in an unnatural stair step in pitch that makes human vocals sound unhuman.

"It really wasn't meant to be used that way," Hildebrand said, "but it's becoming really popular."

T-Pain
"Thr33 Ringz"

Thanks to high-profile imitators like Kanye West and Lil Wayne, T-Pain's once-signature cyborgesque Auto-Tune-enhanced vocals have become something of the norm. On his third album, he makes the case for his misunderstood genius by reasserting that no one has a better idea of how to make a T-Pain song than T-Pain.

"Long Lap Dance" has all the T-Pain hallmarks—the robotic vocals, the mild raunch, the humor—but is far gentler than his previous work. So is the rest of this album, one of the softest soul records in recent memory.

But most jarring is "Keep Going," a shockingly straightforward ode to his family. The raw emotion surprises, but so does the delivery mode: gone are the robotic vocals. Instead, T-Pain sings unadorned, and sings well.

Maybe after months of having rappers imitate his every move, T-Pain just wanted something that couldn't be copied. JOH CARAMANICA, NEW YORK TIMES

How Auto-Tune works

The Washington Post

The great irony of the Auto-Tune explosion is that the software that's now being used to distort vocals in an intentionally obvious, attention-getting, over-the-top way was originally created to do something stealthy in the recording studio: correct pitch problems.

While pop music isn't anything like rocket science, it took a geophysicist to figure out how to clean up wrong notes. Twenty years ago Harold "Andy" Hildebrand started a company, Jupiter Systems (since renamed Antares), that applied mathematical models and digital-signal processing technology to musical applications.

Introduced by Antares in 1997, the Auto-Tune application was revolutionary. It reduced the need for—and expense of—doing countless vocal retakes in pursuit of a perfect end-to-end vocal; it also allowed singers (J. Lo) with pitch problems (Britney) to sound somewhat palatable (Cassie).

"The automatic algorithm compares the pitch of the singer to a scale, then gradually moves the singer's pitch toward the scale note," Hildebrand said.

Auto-Tune and pitch-correction programs

AUTO-TUNE FOR YOU

Antares is releasing a discounted, stripped-down version of Auto-Tune this month to coincide with the release of T-Pain's latest album. Auto-Tune plug-ins typically sell for more than $300, but Antares is offering the Auto-Tune EFX for $99 through Guitar Center.

like it are now used in just about every pop genre. There's also a version that can be used during concerts. Is it live? Yes. Are you hearing the music naturally, without "invisible" fixes? Maybe not.

It's so prevalent that Nashville producers rave when they encounter mainstream country singers, like Ashton Shepherd, who can record without any pitch correction. Harvey Mason Jr., a successful pop and R&B songwriter-producer, conservatively estimates that 60 percent of recording artists are using Auto-Tune as it was originally intended.

Is it cheating?

"I don't engage in those conversations," Hildebrand said. "I just make software."

'Savage' love brings series back to Chicago

Erik Larsen's "Savage Dragon" has traveled through space, been to hell and was even elected U.S. president—although the Supreme Court disallowed it—since debuting in his own comic-book series in 1992.

Now Larsen is bringing the green-skinned crimefighter, who happens to have a fin on top of his head, back to his Chicago roots. The former Windy City police officer is returning to the force.

"Writing and drawing Savage Dragon as a cop after nearly 12 years feels good—it feels right," Larsen told me. "It's a homecoming of sorts and it's a joy to be back."

The Dragon was first discovered in a burning Chicago field without any memory as to who he was or where he came from. At the time, the CPD was battling a number of super-powered criminals called superfreaks. Dragon was recruited to fight these beings. His adventures eventually took him away from Chicago—and out of his uniform.

"What I hadn't counted on was just how much readers identified him as a police officer," Larsen said. "To them, that was as much a part of his look as the fin on his head."

"Savage Dragon #145," published by Image Comics, goes on sale in February. In it, the Dragon's archenemies, the Vicious Circle, return with a vengeance. He rejoins the CPD to take them on.

"It made sense on a story level and it was something readers really wanted," Larsen said. "It really just felt right."

Larsen, who was born in Minneapolis and now lives in Oakland, Calif., set the Dragon's adventures in Chicago because he felt New York City already had its share of superheroes. But he had another important reason: "the pizza," he said. "For crying out loud, why would anybody go elsewhere? It's just a great city with a rich history."

Larsen made The Dragon a White Sox fan. The scaly-skinned hero recently captured national attention when he "endorsed" Chicago's own Barack Obama during the presidential campaign.

"I think Savage Dragon is what put Obama over the top," Larsen said.

Ah, Parade magazine: When you really want to wrap your head around a topic, it never disappoints.

Recently, the mag (newspaper supplement?) decided to take “a break from this serious and intense season” to answer a question no doubt weighing heavy on the nation’s heart amid troubling economic times: Who is America’s favorite celebrity?

Parade teamed up with “Entertainment Tonight” for this national vote. RedEye just had to weigh in, so we examined the field to find out what makes these 10 stars so darn likable.

'Dancing' with pain

First Misty May-Treanor went down with an Achilles tendon. Then two-time "Dancing with the Stars" champ Julianne Hough had to have an appendectomy. Add Kym Johnson to the list of ailing dancers. The dancer suffered a shoulder injury over the weekend, accesshollywood.com reported. She was cleared to dance on Monday night's show. After a less-than-stellar foxtrot last week, Johnson told People that she and her partner, former NFL star Warren Sapp, would be pushing themselves in this week's competition.

Priceless wedding

Beyonce refuses to put a price on photos of her wedding to Jay-Z, saying the offer of "crazy money" is "ridiculous," according to The Associated Press. B and Jay were married in April in an intimate ceremony in New York City. "We worked really hard at keeping it private," she said. "I've always been this way, and he's always been this way, so that's why we complement each other."

All access Hannah?

The Obama girls may be visiting the "Hannah Montana" set soon, accesshollywood.com reported. "The invitation is there," Miley Cyrus' dad told "Access Hollywood" of a possible visit by Malia and Sasha Obama. "The 'Hannah Montana' film comes out in April. Maybe something might happen around then." He wouldn't spill any details, saying only, "I have got to keep a secret."

A girl was reportedly hurt after a crowd of mostly tween "Twilight" fans got rowdy at a San Francisco mall, the San Francisco Chronicle reported. About 3,000 arrived Monday for an autograph session with Robert Pattinson, who plays Edward Cullen. The appearance was canceled. Think that's extreme? Pattinson told People that a 7-year-old girl recently asked him, "Can you bite me?"

Lindsay Lohan may be dating a woman, but she doesn't consider herself a lesbian.

"I don't want to classify myself," Lohan told Harper's Bazaar in an interview for its December edition. When asked whether she'd consider herself bisexual, she responds, "Maybe," according to excerpts from Reuters.

Lohan also spoke at length about her relation-

"I think it's pretty obvious who I'm seeing," Lohan told Harper's. "I think it's no shock to anyone that it's been going on for quite some time. ... She's a wonderful person and I love her very much."
